

Sierra Club Polling & Research Internship: Washington, D.C

Are you wondering if a career as a pollster, research analyst, or progressive communications expert is for you? This internship program will offer you a chance to learn about analyzing polling and research to help guide communications and political strategy and messaging for the nation's largest and most effective grassroots environmental organization.

The Sierra Club's national Polling & Research Analyst is seeking a motivated, organized and personable intern. This is a great opportunity to learn more about polling, research, and communications in the progressive non-profit world, while making an impact on critical environmental issues.

Responsibilities will include:

- Monitoring and compiling polling and research
- Aiding in data analysis and report writing
- Assisting in presentations and material organizing
- Drafting and editing polling briefings and newsletters
- Providing general support for the Communications team
- Other individual projects as assigned

The ideal candidate would be a self-motivated, energetic, strategic thinker with very strong analytical and writing abilities, good organizational skills, and a passion for the environment, politics, and policy. Prior research experience is a plus. Responsibilities will be tailored to personal skills and areas of interest.

Other qualifications: Current undergraduate/graduate student or recent college graduate. If you are foreign student, we cannot review your application unless you are part of a program that arranges your paperwork for you--we cannot arrange an H1B visa.

Internships are available now for the Spring. Please apply by January 1, 2012.

Applications will be reviewed on a rolling basis.

Minimum 10 hours scheduled at your discretion. Class credit may be available. We are willing to provide any documentation necessary to help students get credit.
