Oil ban Act will challenge Feds

On the anniversary of the devastating 1969 oil blowout from Platform A in the Santa Barbara Channel, a new generation on Jan. 28, 2017 gathered at Shoreline Park not only to say 'no' to any new oil development, but to offer renewable energy solutions.

It was our new Congressman Salud Carbajal's first major action as he announced the California Clean Coast Act HR 731 that would ban future offshore oil projects in federal waters (beyond the threemile limit), in defiance against a hostile and oil-lovin' Trump Administration, which wants to do the opposite.

How's that going to work out? "I realize there's not a very high chance of it being successful," Carbajal told the San Luis Obispo Tribune, but "I'm always hopeful."

"We have more support than you might think," Santa Barbara Group Chair Katie Davis told the supportive crowd of over 100 on a beautiful, postcard picture day.

She noted that when President Obama proposed drilling in the Atlantic, "there was an outcry, not just in the liberal northeast, but the southeast," including the red states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida where "90 percent of coastal cities passed resolutions against offshore drilling or seismic testing."

She concluded: "It would be an incredible waste of public resources for the Trump Administration to

On the anniversary of the reopen that (leasing) process, and a stating 1969 oil blowout from bad move politically."

"Ask any coastal city anywhere, don't mess with our beaches!"

Local support included the Sierra Club, Community Environmental Council and Environmental Defense Center (EDC), among others, notably the SB Adventure company whose owner, Michael Cohen, noted that "the Channel Islands and our cherished California coastline are our office, our classroom, our playground, and our sanctuary," all of which brings income from tourism, fishing and recreation.

"The Sierra Club fully supports Congressman Carbajal ... and the club will do everything in its power to help get this important legislation passed by Congress," said Los Padres Chapter Chair Jim Hines, who will be in contact with the club's National staff on how best to support the effort.

"It is not a question of if, but when, another spill will devastate our shores," said EDC attorney Linda Krop. She reminded all that "our coast and community are still recovering from the 2015 oil pipeline spill (along the Gaviota Coast)." That pipeline spill occurred onshore but reaching into the ocean, spilling oil all along the Santa Barbara and Ventura coasts, some even reaching Los Angeles waters.

Carbajal also called out to remove oil industry subsidies.

BULLETIN:

State Controller Betty Yee released a statement Jan. 31 opposing expanding oil extraction at Platform Holly off the coast of Santa Barbara, owned by Venoco. Our local chapter, working with Environmental Defense Center attorneys, have been fighting this expansion idea.

YEAR 2016 Local success, nat'l disaster

By Jim Hines

Chapter Chair

Wow, what a year 2016 was for our Los Padres Chapter. We made major gains in many programs, issues and campaigns and enjoyed free outings while we set a record enrollment in our very popular Wilderness Basic Course. And our electric vehicles show drew hundreds to events in Oxnard and Solvang.

However, we lost a great friend in 2016, Jerry Connor, who for years led our Arguello Group in north Santa Barbara.

We're grateful that the public helped elect virtually all of the Chapter's endorsed candidates in Santa Barbara and Ventura counties, and overwhelmingly supported renewing the important Ventura County growth control measure (Save Our Agricultural Resources).

Of course, we did not fare so well in national elections. A major focus of the Sierra Club's work in 2017 will be to stop the environmental disaster known as the Trump Administration. We cannot underestimate the potential of his administration to negatively fracking. Also, numerous federally protected wildlife species in our region will be under threat of losing that status if the Endangered Species Act is undermined. We truly have our work cut out for us, but the Sierra Club has geared up with the strategy of Resist, Recruit, Train and Sustain.

I am so proud of the work of our many group leaders, activists, hike leaders, event organizers and financial supporters this past year: without each of YOU we would not have make the gains we had in 2016. We'll do even more in 2017 with your help!

Each of our four groups played an important role in connecting members and supporters with issues within their local area. They are:

~ Arguello Group made great strides in stopping the large, 144-oil well proposal in north SB county, testifying against oil trains, protecting open space in the Santa Ynez Valley and raising public awareness of the Sierra Club.

~ Santa Barbara Group worked hard to prevent more offshore oil drilling and advocated for more oversight to prevent Community Choice Energy for the tri-counties region (now under study). It helped stop leapfrog development but promoted protection and more public access along the majestic Gaviota Coast, and the front country areas of the Los Padres National Forest, ~ Ventura Sierra Club expanded the campaign to protect the Santa Clara River, continued our work to protect Ormond Beach while also placing a major emphasis on public outreach.

Resistance Adds-Up!

Did you love the vibes from the Women's Marches after the inauguration but are wondering where to go from there?

The Sierra Club's new activist network is one good way to stay active NOW at:

www.addup.org

It keeps track of your activism, whether it be sending a letter to support a new marine sanctuary off our shores, defend federal workers from retaliation, fight for reasonable bank and/or oil regulations, petitions asserting "no place for hate in our government" and "strengthen presidential conflict-of-interest" laws.

The Sierra Club turns 125 years old this year and, as Executive Director Michael Brune writes, we've seen our share of hostile presidents and tough fights. So even though "President Donald Trump and his administration represent the biggest imaginable challenge to our mission and to our values... we'll do a lot more than survive. We will resist—in the courts, in the states, in Congress, and in the marketplace."

Regardless of how many battles we win or lose, we will emerge stronger in the end.

There's so much more ... the club has also launched an activist fund-raising called Team Sierra Club in which you can turn your passion or activity to help support our many efforts, including protecting wildlands and wildlife, keeping our air and water free from pollution, and promoting a clean energy future. To learn more, simply go to: www.TeamSierra.org affect our region, as we have a lot of federal property: the Los Padres National Forest, Santa Monica Mountains National Park and Channel Islands National Park.

WHAT A VIEW Recovering a historical trail

By Perry Van Houten

Work has begun to reopen a historic trail originally built by Ojai forest rangers more than 100 years The six-mile-long Ocean ago. View Trail (OVT) offers unrivaled views of the backcountry, and as its name implies, far-reaching vistas of the Santa Barbara Channel.

The effort is by Ojai Valley Land Conservancy (OVLC), in partnership with the Ojai Ranger District of the U.S. Forest Service and Los Padres Forest Association (LPFA).

"It is the hope and plan to one day join our Ventura River Preserve to the trail, via a 10-mile route along the Kennedy Ridge and Camino Cielo trails, that could connect hikers, mountain bikers, trail runners and equestrians to the Matilija Canyon Trailhead some 20 miles distant," says Rick Bisaccia, OVLC Stewardship Director.

The trail stretches from the end of the old Camino Cielo

" It's shortsighted believe you're going to save the sea lions to simply by rescuing them, rehabilitating them and then sending them out when there's really not enough food to go around."

~ A record-setting 534 sealions were found stranded and rehabbed last year from the Channel Islands and coast. More is expected this year due to lack of sardines and anchovies due to climate change, said Geoff Shester of Oceana.

Road on the Ojai Valley side to the Divide Peak OHV route above Matilija Canyon near the Murietta Divide. "It would also be possible to connect via the western terminus of the OVT to an existing route which joins with the top of the Franklin Trail, which begins in Carpinteria," Bisaccia says.

The trail was built around 1903 by Ojai forest rangers, including Bob Clark and George Bald. They were among the most colorful and accomplished mountain men of the time, and Bald's son, Howard, was the first forest ranger for the Ojai Ranger District.

But before the OVT can be opened to public use, Bisaccia says an official study on the route has to be done. That entails cutting a narrow pathway, called a p-line, along the route to accommodate surveys by scientist for an environmental impact report.

The effort to reopen the OVT is getting plenty of support from volunteers, young and old.

"Several months ago, water was cached by volunteers on the western section of the trail, and on the weekend of November 18-20, several OVLC trail crew volunteers worked a half mile east towards Ojai along the trail from old White Ledge Camp, cutting p-line and route-finding using old USFS trail surveys, topo maps, Google Earth images and a topo map app."

Joining the group were hiking guide author Craig R. Carey and his 32 Boy Scouts, along with leaders of Ventura's Troop 111. Comprising boys mostly in the sixth grade, it specializes in backpacking and taking on service projects in the forest.

A projected reopening date for the OVT has not been set, but Bisaccia says he's looking forward to a ribbon-cutting someday.

"It's my hope that the outdoor recreation community will come together to support the eventual approval and completion of this truly epic trail project. The contributions of volunteers and the help we've gotten from the U.S. Forest Service, LPFA, and Supervisor Steve Bennett's and Congress member Julia Brownley's offices are the kinds of backing needed to make such a project successful."

Basics Course is ... SOLD OUT!

But there is a waiting list.

The wilderness course is wildly popular, gaining fans and students ever since our first class in 2009, by our founder, Teresa Norris. This edition runs from Feb. 8 through March 29; follow our adventures on Facebook, get on the waiting list or sign up (for next year???):

www.lospadresWBC.org

Showing that we give back – not only in training -- the WBC team took a break from planning the upcoming course to dole out donations to several local groups.

Our Sierra Club Los Padres Chapter got $2,800, allocated among several different areas: $500 each to legal, wildlife, energy, outings, and Ventura County trails access. In addition, the group gave $300 to go towards a memorial from the Chapter for Jerry Connor. We are also endowing a WBC scholarship in Jerry's name, with a value of $200. In addition to all his

Our annual Wilderness responsibilities with the Arguello Group and the Chapter, Jerry was a beloved member of the WBC board for several years.

> We also gave $250 to each of the four Los Padres Chapter Groups: Ventura, Conejo, Arguello and Santa Barbara. We know that sometimes the Groups need funds for special causes.

In addition, at the suggestion of Condor John Hankins, the group donated funds for Search and Rescue (SAR) teams. We voted to give $200 each to the following seven SAR Groups: Santa Barbara County, East Ventura County, Fillmore, Upper Ojai, Ventura County Dive Team, Ventura County K-9, and Ventura County Medical Team, along with this letter of appreciation:

"The Wilderness Basics Course, a teaching wing of the Los Padres Chapter of the Sierra Club, stands in awe and appreciation of the work and sacrifice your team of volunteers face every day at any hour."

ExCom leaders stay

Jim Hines and Katie Davis were elected to the two of the five at-large seats on the Los Padres Executive Committee.

The first action of the ExCom at the January 26 meeting was to appoint Jim Hines as Chair and Katie Davis as Vice Chair. In addition, Gerry Ching was re-appointed as Secretary and Richard Hunt as Treasurer.

The ExCom consists of five elected at-large seats plus three Group Reps from each regional group. The at-large seats are elected for two year terms, but terms are staggered to preserve continuity.

The board also enthusiastically renewed the club's affiliation with the Naples Coalition, a key to protecting the Gaviota Coast area.

They also approved funds to distribute more Condor Calls to the public by placing stacks in well-traveled service and retail stores.

We march, protest for American values

The Women's March on Jan. 21 turned out to be not only a March on Washington DC to protect human rights, the environment, healthcare and freedom of religion, but a global protest against the Trump Administration's likely assault on all those issues.

The Sierra Club was on board from the beginning. Members from the Los Padres Chapter turned out in large numbers joining an estimated 2,300 participants in city of Ventura and 6,000 in Santa Barbara. But nationwide, the numbers were even more stunning at about 3 million, making it the largest single-day demonstration in the nation's history. Worldwide estimates were at 4.8 million.

While it started out as a march on Washington to "send a bold message ... that women's rights are human rights," it exploded to include at least 675 marches worldwide in all seven continents, even one in Antarctica!

Clearly, the participation in DC was bigger than Donald Trump's inauguration, according to the Lion Media.

After such a success, the organizers posted the "10 Actions for the first 100 Days" campaign for joint activism to keep up the momentum.

As Sierra Club member Carla Bollinger said, "it was named the Women's March but it could also have been the We are One march. Be afraid – be very afraid, and then get busy because work has to be done to protect America," she concluded.

Our chapter is already committed to conduct a postcard writing campaign during Earth Days and will continue its lobbying efforts, notably by our Chair Jim Hines going to Washington in March.

When I learned that not one, but three environment-related US Senate confirmation hearings were scheduled for January 17-19, I decided to go to Washington DC.

This was not completely foreign territory, as my dad taught political science at George Washington University, and I had gone with my mother to visit our Congressional representative. I went online to find out the details, and when I got to the DC hearings, security was not a problem, even friendly . . . more so when I got to the third floor. The first thing I saw was an open door with the American flag to one side, and a plaque with the name of Senator Bernie Sanders!

The main event was the committee hearing for Scott Pruitt as the head of the Environmental Protection Agency. The Sierra Club, 350.org, and Friends of the Earth had organized an impressive rally outside the building, which then moved inside.

So many people jammed the halls that there was little chance to get into the actual hearing, as the room filled up with senators, staff, news media and Pruitt's supporters. I saw much of the questioning on a large screen in the overflow room. While outside the EPA hearing, there was a ripple of applause as Sen. Tim Kaine came smiling by. I said "hello" as my brother knows this "nicest guy" from Harvard Law school. Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey walked by and I thanked him for his work; he also asked good auestions.

In the halls of D.C.

Then a guy dressed up with feathers all over came by, with a sign that said "Help", meaning Pruitt would be bad for birds. Later, I recognized Medea Benjamin, cofounder of Global Exchange and Code Pink, who had once run for CA Senator. I called out her name and we had a hug!

Senators questioned Pruitt about his ties with oil and gas companies, suing the EPA in his capacity as Oklahoma Attorney General, conflicts of interest, climate change, state vs. federal rights, and much more.

California's new Senator, Kamala Harris, was formidable in her questioning of Pruitt, as was ranking member Sen. Tom Carper of Delaware. Later, I went down to the basement to find Harris' temporary office, and was happy to meet and compliment her effort.

The hearing for Rick Perry as Energy Secretary found Sen. Sanders pressing him on his climate change views, and there was a significant discussion of nuclear energy, weapons and waste. Perry did not give a definitive answer as to storing nuclear waste at Yucca Mountain.

The hearing for Interior Secretary nominee Ryan Zinke

WILDLIFE

Don't fence us in!

BULLETIN: The count is up to three dead cougars in our region killed by traffic within the last two months, accelerating the importance of establishing wildlife corridors. Road kill of other animals is also accelerated.

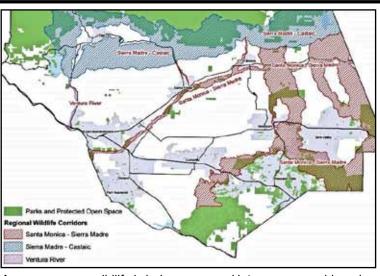

By Carla Bollinger

There's now hope that wildlife may be able to avoid "choke points" that restrict their natural movements, now that the Ventura County Supervisors approved an important "Habitat Connectivity and Wildlife Movement" study on a narrow 3-2 vote.

Signaling that it's an important topic – and would be the first planning zone of its kind for Ventura County -- the Jan. 24 meeting drew a packed house with 50 people speaking, reducing the time to 2 minutes per speaker. A lengthy debate occurred that resulted in asking staff to come up with details.

"The Los Padres Chapter will now be meeting with county planning staff to help develop the actual planning rules to carry out the board's direction," said Los Padres Chapter Chair Jim Hines, who urged the board to "follow the spirit of SOAR," the county-wide ordinance that was decisively renewed in the November election.

As you can see, wildlife is being squeezed into narrow corridors due to urban encroachment. Solutions? County staff working on it!

Resource Management Agency (RMA), Kari Finley and Abigail Convery, presented various options and maps of wildlife movement, notably from the 2006 South Coast Wildlands Project that evaluated impacts on animals throughout Southern California. Agencies involved were as varied as CalTrans and state Dept. of Fish & Wildlife.

Of special concern on the designated wildlife corridors are the "choke points" caused by urban sprawl, physical barriers such as roads, freeways and fencing. Indirect barriers were also noted: bright night light, loud noise, anti-rodenticide poisoning, and lack of natural vegetation for wildlife.

Staff emphasized this was a public outreach and they certainly got plenty of feedback.

Seth Riley of the National Park Service had a Power Point presentation covering mountain lions in LA-Ventura counties and their survival challenges: Mortality on roads, barriers for movement and genetic differentiation.

Merrill Berge, SOARarea coordinator for Camarillo, pointed out the pending development proposals that would impact the Conejo Creek, one of the last open, natural wildlife under-crossings beneath the 101 in Ventura County.

Support for wildlife movement corridors for all animals from birds to cougars was advocated by Julie Newsome, Santa Monica Mountains Fund and Save LA Cougars, among many others.

Farmers and ranchers raised their concerns, especially the possibilities of additional regulations, more cost to comply and erosion of farming rights. In reply, Paul Edelman of the Mountains Recreation and Conservation Authority, reminded everyone that it's early in the process, and compromises can be reached.

"As our county becomes increasingly urbanized, wildlife is getting squeezed out of areas they have historically used for migration routes," Hines said. He gave credit to "the hard work of Ventura County Supervisor Linda Parks, who drafted this plan."

Forest use fees raised

You may get sticker shock if you're visiting the Los Padres National Forest this year, due to a major rise in fees. Bryan Conant of the Los Padres Forest Association has put together a list of the new fees compared to what they were last year. It covers the price status of 123 recreation areas! Kudos to Bryan for all his work.

Check out all those fee increases at:

tinyurl.com/LPNFchanges

Forest Supervisor Robert Baird responded to an editorial in the Ventura County Star, explaining "reduced budgets have decreased our ability to maintain every popular site to the level of public expectations."

He added that of the 123 sites, "52 are managed by a concessionaire ... the remaining 71 campgrounds, trailheads and day-use sites are 58 percent of forest recreation sites that require an Adventure Pass or are free."

More details are at the forest website, but are not as easy to determine costs as the LPFA's list:

An old trail renews our strength

By Jim Hines Greetings, Friends

One can learn a lot about the land, plants, wildlife and oneself by taking just one hike. To be out in nature, free of human obligations allowing one's soul to find the inner strength we all need to face life's challenges is such an amazing experience. The bond I feel with nature is a bond which has lasted a lifetime for me.

It all started with my first hike when I was about 5 years old with my father: Laguna Ridge, a Los Padres National Forest 6-mile long fire road north of Lake Casitas where I grew up.

When I was young, it was the "top of the world" at around 2200 feet high. I could see down on our ranch house, Lake Casitas, the entire Ojai Valley and, at the end of the ridge, Carpinteria and far off Santa Barbara and even the Channel Islands offshore. You could even reach Matilija Canyon.

Over the years, I have been fortunate to walk in many beautiful wild areas in our state and nation, but still my favorite

After our recent life-giving rains, I went back and the views were as amazing as ever. Life is vibrant along the ridge; a dozen deer were grazing in a grassy area and they "jumped to attention" was I approached, standing quietly still, was I friend of foe? They returned to grazing, sensing I was a friend.

The bright sky brought several hawks and turkey vultures soaring overhead, then I heard that familiar grunt ... a herd of wild boar were on the move, rooting for roots and boy were they making a commotion.

The first tender shoots of wood ferns were emerging along one of the shady slopes as well as red sage. A hint of blue caught my eye, it was the first two Brodiea (native bulbs) already starting to bloom, more will come in Spring. Several small mammals run fast across the dirt road from time to time, scurrying o avoid predators, but I move slowly to enjoy the land and their presence.

I feel such a bond with the land and I am filled with memories of my father, now buried on our family's former ranch site below me. In fact, I felt his presence, guiding me as he did on so many hikes when I was young.

Nature gives me energy, gives me

Chapter Chair Jim Hines writes about the renewal given by the outdoors that include 'eye-candy' views from his favorite hiking trail, Laguna Ridge, where you see both land and sea, including Lake Casitas. Artist Ray Strong also tuned in and painted this artistic view of the lake. It's part of the Wildling Museum's special exhibit "Private Collections" comprised of artwork borrowed from its members. Exhibit opens from Feb. 24 to May 29 . Details at: www.WildlingMuseum.org Meanwhile, the trail is always open 24-7.

passion and gives me the strength and encouragement to continue my work on behalf of the Sierra Club to fight to protect all which is great and wild.

A wild place like Laguna Ridge was once threatened by oil drilling, an operation we stopped long ago, and now stands as a symbol we must respect, appreciate and protect.

The soil was damp, animal tracks were everywhere: bobcat, bear, deer, quail and wild turkey all of which inhabit this great, wild place. But no sign of the largest predators, mountain lions. They are here, I have seen them frequently over the years. Perhaps they were here today but I did not see them, these 'ghost cats' as they were called by the Chumash.

Silence was my partner on this hike, the silence to feel and absorb all of the beauty around me, the wildlife, and the quiet, oh the quietness of the land, but it has stories to tell and knowledge to share.

I have learned from the land, she has taught me well, a respect for something greater than myself. I am alone in this great land but I am not lonely; I feel as if I am a giant on top of the world looking down on creation, basking in the sunlight in quiet meditation. Our great wild places can heal and educate us, and all the land expects in return is for each of us to protect and respect it.

I am serenaded as I end my hike by a group of blue jays; I feel they are wishing me well and asking that I return soon to this special place, Laguna Ridge, my sanctuary.

See you on the trail.
