

They're back -- or at least they will be Monday!

June 9, 2023

Hi all!

After a couple of weeks off, the Arizona Legislature will be back on Monday. So far, we have heard they may have agreement on an affordable housing bill that could advance, but there's still no agreement on the Proposition 400 (Maricopa County transportation sales tax) bill. See more on that below. The rumor is that after addressing a few bills, they may recess again until August 1st. The House may also take some action to sanction Representative Stephanie Stahl-Hamilton for her first amendment protest -- hiding the bibles that were in the member's lounge. It's just ridiculous that they are spending any more time on that.

It also looks like they are going to revive a referendum to require proportionate signatures by legislative district to put a citizen initiative on the ballot. That will make it a lot more difficult and more expensive and would allow one district to block a measure from getting on the ballot. Ask your representative to vote NO on SCR1015 and to oppose efforts to make it more difficult to engage in citizen initiatives. Use the button below to take action.

Vote NO on SCR1015!

Maricopa County is the only county in Arizona that needs legislative approval and the governor's signature to call an election for a transportation sales tax. Unfortunately, the legislature has refused to approve a clean version of a bill and instead has been trying to limit the dollars that can go toward transit.

After 500 meetings and feedback from more than 10,000 residents, Mayors and other elected leaders agreed on a plan that includes transit, Tell state leaders: Let voters decide their transportation future.

On Tuesday, please join us at the Arizona State Capitol House Lawn from 12:00 PM -1:00 PM to bring awareness to the voting related bills that passed and were killed during the 2023 Arizona Legislative session, and to continue to stress the need for inclusive, equitable, and accessible democratic policies and practices!

To review bills we are tracking, go to this link.
