Cumberland Island Update

Cumberland Island National Seashore is a Georgia treasure cherished by people across the nation. The largest and most biodiverse of Georgia's barrier islands, Cumberland Island is also one of the last remnant stretches of wild coastline anywhere on the southern Atlantic coast.

Now the island is at risk of development. Earlier this year, local planning officials granted a variance that would allow 88-acres of undeveloped land to be subdivided. Over ten thousand Sierra Club supporters signed a petition opposing the variance. Now, Camden County Commissioners are considering making development friendly zoning revisions to all 1,000 acres of privately held land on the island!

Will you attend a Camden Board of Commissioners meeting to voice your opposition to more development on Cumberland Island?
