Coastal Commission Coming to San Luis Obispo in March

by Jack McCurdy

The California Coastal Commission is coming to town again, presenting Sierra Club members and other environmental activists a golden opportunity to show their support for the Commission and to reinforce our demands for preservation of the Hearst Ranch as part of a strong Local Coastal Plan, which is scheduled for Periodic Review at the meeting. Oceano Dunes also are on the agenda, and forceful ongoing support from members for protection of the threatened and endangered species trying to survive the destruction of tens of thousands of off-road vehicles also is needed when the Commission reviews the status of limits on off-road vehicles there.

The Local Coastal Plan Period Review is tentatively scheduled for 9 a.m. on Wednesday, March 5, and the Oceano Dunes on Friday, March 7. The Commission meeting will be held from March 4 to 7 at the Embassy Suites Hotel. The outcome of the Local Coastal Plan Periodic Review—at this meeting and probably at future ones—will literally determine whether our coast and huge undeveloped areas like the Hearst Ranch are saved for posterity or destroyed.

“It is vitally important for large numbers to attend the meeting and tell the Commission that the people of San Luis Obispo County support the rigorous implementation of the Coastal Act,” said Tarren Collins, Chair of the Santa Lucia Chapter, which is coordinating presentations to the Commission. (The Review will be a main topic of discussion at the Chapter’s General Meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 25.) It is a particularly important continued on page 5

Coastal Commission stalwart Sara Wan along with Sierra Club leaders Mark Massara and Elizabeth Lambe—famous locally for their organizing efforts that helped us defeat the Hearst Corporation development plans at the Commission hearing here in 1998—will headline the General Meeting program on Tuesday, Feb. 25. Together, they will pull back the curtain on what lies ahead in the struggle for coastal protection in 2003, revealing the challenges that the Club and its members face.

Their appearances couldn’t be more timely as the Chapter gears up for the March 4-7 meeting of the California Coastal Commission in San Luis Obispo where Hearst Ranch development is expected to be high on the agenda as part of renewed discussion of the county’s critically-important Local Coastal Plan. The meeting will be at the Embassy Suites Hotel.

Massara, the Club’s Coastal Program director, and Lambe, manager of the Club’s Great Coastal Places Campaign, will discuss new plans for the second year of the highly-successful Campaign and ideas for continuing its growth beyond the force of 5,000 coastal activists who joined up last year. They also will devote their considerable experience and expertise to explaining the importance of speaking to the Commission and how we can have an impact just by showing up at the hearings. They will be available to continued on page 4

Santa Lucia Chapter News

by Ross L. Pepper, Program Chair and temporary office manager

Your Santa Lucia Chapter is on the move, and we want you to get on board. First, our monthly General Meetings have been changed to the last Tuesday of the month. The next one is on Tuesday, Feb. 25. The meetings will still be at the Meadow Park Rec Center in San Luis Obispo. Please take note and help us support the programs we put together for your benefit and information.

Second, if you missed the announcement a few months ago, the Chapter office has moved downtown to 1204 Nipomo St., corner of Nipomo and Marsh streets. Our phone number is 543-8717, and the answering machine will continue to provide recorded information as well as take messages.

Third, we are still searching for a volunteer to take over as Office Manager. This is an extremely important position, and you would be making a wonderful contribution to your Chapter if you would be interested in either assuming the responsibility or in filling in part-time.

Our office now is staffed Monday, Wednesday and Friday for several hours in the morning by me and on alternate Tuesdays by Janet White, while Joan O’Keefe continues to lend her expertise as needed to keep things running smoothly. The daily tasks of the office staff are to (a) pick up the mail at the Marsh Street Post Office, (b) open and route all incoming correspondence appropriately, (c) download and log messages from the telephone answering system and take action where needed or route messages to the appropriate party, and (d) enter information into a computer database system from callers leaving their names and addresses seeking information about a specific issue or to volunteer for an activity or event. This enables that future contact can be assured.

On a monthly basis, the office manager oversees labeling of the Chapter’s monthly newsletter, the Santa Lucian, by a group of volunteers for mailing. In addition, the manager prepares a brief report summarizing the activities in the office before each monthly Executive Committee meeting.

Serving as office manager is a great way to help the Chapter and the Sierra Club remain effective in their mission to protect our environment. Please consider volunteering. You may contact me at the office number.

Coastal Protection Turns 30

by Jack McCurdy

The 30th anniversary of the people's initiative that produced the Coastal Act and the Coastal Commission was celebrated, and the dogged activists who over those three decades invented coastal protection and helped make it work were honored in Monterey earlier this month.

Proposition 20, the historic initiative that passed by a wide margin in 1972 and placed coastal development under public control by a statewide body, was the centerpiece of the gala dinner at the Monterey Bay Aquarium on Feb. 1, and 10 “Coastal Champions” were presented with awards—some of whom helped organize and pass the ballot measure, which led to the strongest coastal management law in the United States.

About 250 people attended the dinner, including Tarren Collins, chair of the Santa Lucia chapter. Six additional Coastal Champions received their awards in person at a companion anniversary dinner on Jan. 24 at the Aquarium of the Pacific in Long Beach.

“Thirty years later, it’s important for us to remember why a citizen-based initiative like Prop. 20 was necessary,” said Bill Allayaud, legislative director of Sierra Club California, lead sponsor of the events, and himself a former Commission intern, a planner and legislative liaison. “There was a legitimate concern that we would have Miami Beach-like, high-rise buildings lining the coast if we didn’t act to stop irresponsible development.”

“The people we honor serve as the continuing inspiration for those of us who follow their footsteps in the sand,” said Susan Jordan of the California Coastal Protection Network. “It is their diligence and persistence that provide the encouragement we need to carry on the never-ending battle to save the California coast.”

Peter Douglas, executive director of the Coastal Commission and a legislative staff member who helped write the law that created the Commission, told the gathering that “the coast is never saved—it is always being saved.” He was among those honored as a Coastal Champion. “Prop. 20 is an enduring tribute to what the environmental community can do. What we have accomplished is also a tribute to all of you. We need to fight the fight on behalf of the children,” Douglas predicted that “the people who want to make the Commission history are going to strengthen it.”

Their legal challenge to the Commission’s constitutionality will result in legislation giving members fixed terms and more independence, something “we tried to do in 1976 (when the Legislature approved the Coastal Act) but couldn’t accomplish then,” he said.

Michael Fischer, former Commission executive director and an award recipient, recalled that the bill creating the Coastal Act “passed in the last hours of the legislative session by one vote.” Sara Wan, one of the strongest and most respected Chairs in Commission history and a recipient of a Coastal Champion award, said “the role of the activist is most critical” in making the Commission an effective bulwark for coastal protection. “The ultimate power is in our numbers,” she said. “The Commission can’t survive alone. You must continue to contribute and come to meetings. It’s the only way to make the system work.”

Jordan noted that when Wan started out as a grassroots activist, she was encouraged by Douglas to appear more often before the Commission. “She did so for seven years,” Jordan said, “and then was appointed by (then state Senate President) Bill Lockyer. She became a lightening rod for the fight over Lease Sale 53 which would have opened up oil drilling off the Central Coast.”

Mark Massara, coastal program manager for Sierra Club California, who estimated he argues 100 cases before the Commission annually, said the Commission is surrounded by “chaos” and coastal protection is immersed in “constant crisis.” But “this stuff just makes us stronger,” he said. “That fact has less to do with the arguments I make before the Commission and more with how many people appear before the Commission and write letters to Commissioners.”

Also honored were members of the Coastal Commission staff, some of whom were in the audience. It is often called the best of any agency in Sacramento, Douglas said “my accomplishments would not have been possible without our staff. Mine are theirs.” He told them, “My success is your success. It is a tribute to you. Yours is a noble and ennobling work.”

Those honored as Coastal Champions:

* Ellen Stern Harris. Sometimes referred to as the “mother of the Coastal Act,” she hosted a meeting at the kitchen table of her Los Angeles home in 1971 where the idea for an initiative came to fruition following several years of the Legislature failing to act.
* Alan Sieroty. Former Los Angeles area member of the state Assembly who pushed early coastal protection legislation and then co-authored the Coastal Act of 1976.

* Mel Nutter. Former member of a previous South Coast Regional Coastal Commission and chair of the Coastal Commission from 1982 to 1985.
* Naomi Schwartz. Former Chair of the Commission and a member from 1982 to 1992.
* Mel Lane. Chair of the Commission in 1973 and longtime environmental activist.
* Lennie Roberts. Coastal activist from San Mateo County and former member of the Central Coast Regional Commission.
* Phyllis Faber. Worked to get Prop. 20 on the ballot and passed and former member of the North Central Regional Commission from Marin County.
* Warner Chabot. Worked for passage of Prop. 20 as a college student and longtime staff member of the Ocean Conservancy (formerly Center for Marine Conservation).
* Bill Kortum. Helped write Prop. 20.
* Ann Nothoff. Staff member of the Natural Resources Defense Council, who has worked on coastal protection since 1978.
* Richard Charter. Campaigned against offshore oil drilling since the 1970s and led the fight against Lease Sale 53 which would have opened up oil drilling off the Central Coast.
* Sara Wan. Appointed to the Commission in 1996, served as chair for more than three years, co-founded Vote the Coast, a political action committee dedicated to helping elect coastal-friendly candidates.
* Bert Muhly. Professor at UC Santa Cruz who inspired many students to go into environmental planning careers and helped draft Prop. 20.
* Joe Bodovitz. First executive director of the Commission.
* Michael Fischer: second executive director of the Commission and later executive director of the Sierra Club.

Major sponsors of the dinners were Sierra Club California and the League for Coastal Protection, and co-sponsors were the Natural Resources Defense Council, the California Coastal Protection Network, Mel Lane, the Monterey Bay Aquarium and the Long Beach Aquarium.

General Meeting

provide assistance to members about how to make effective presentations to the Commission at its meeting.
Tarren Collins, Chair of the Santa Lucia Chapter, will join them in emphasizing the importance of generating a big turnout for the Commission meeting and will review the local issues under consideration by the Commission, especially the Periodic Review of the Local Coastal Plan. Collins is among a handful of state leaders involved in negotiations of a comprehensive conservation easement for preservation of the Hearst Ranch and stronger protections for the Oceano Dunes wild-life.
"At the meeting, activists will learn what coastal battles are before us at the local and state level and be briefed about threats to our coastline," Collins said. "And you will learn what simple steps you can take to help. I urge you to attend, meet our outstanding and inspiring guests and find out how you can play a key role in helping save our priceless coast."

The General Meeting begins at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 25, at the Meadow Park Rec Center in San Luis Obispo. Members and friends are invited, and refreshments will be served. Doug Buckmaster, a Sierra Club member and president of the Friends of the RanchLand, will provide an update on the Periodic Review of the Local Coastal Plan and discuss the Board of Supervisors’ failure to act on most of the 163 improvements that the Commission has recommended in the Plan.

It’s a rare opportunity to hear five of the most informed and accomplished environmental leaders in California, and especially Wan, who drew a standing-room only crowd at the Chapter’s General Meeting last July, when she analyzed the record of the Commission and what lies ahead for the main protector of California’s coast. She stepped down as Chair last December when her proposed reelection divided the Commission, but she has vowed to continue as a member to be an outspoken and relentless proponent of coastal protection. She will be speaking as executive director of Vote the Coast, a political action committee dedicated to helping elect coastal-friendly candidates, and not in her capacity as a Commissioner. She will discuss how to be effective in protecting the coast.

Massara and Lambe also will report on the current status of legislative efforts in Sacramento to protect the Commission from opponents’ legal challenges, one of which has led to legal decisions questioning its constitutionality. They also will discuss the ongoing record of the Commission in implementing the Coastal Act. Massara attends all Commission meetings and comments or conveys the Club’s positions on a wide variety of matters that come before the Commission, including some involving the Central Coast.

He represented the Chapter at the Commission’s December meeting in San Francisco where he supported the staff’s recommendation for requiring dry cooling of Duke Energy’s proposed new power plant in Morro Bay.

Ongoing threats to California’s coast led the Sierra Club to launch the Great Coastal Places Campaign. Only now, that the very existence of the Coastal Commission has been put in jeopardy, do we realize how crucial and important the Campaign has become. In December, Great Coastal Places activists once again rose to the occasion when Wan faced opposition to her re-election and helped prevent more developer-friendly interests from electing a Chair they supported.

Over 1,000 of you turned out to the Commission hearing here to defeat Hearst’s plans to develop San Simeon Point in 1998. Over 500 came to back-to-back hearings here in February, 2001, to tell the Commission to stop destruction of the Oceano Dunes, and to support Commission staff’s recommendations for the Periodic Review of our county’s Local Coastal Plan. And then last August, over 500 of you came to tell the Commission that we want it to protect our pristine coast from over-development and pollution.

“We need you again!” Collins said. “Please attend the General Meeting to learn more—and please mark your calendar for March 5 and 7 when attendance at the Coastal Commission meeting at the Embassy Suites can make the difference in our fight to save our coast.”

Marine Sanctuary Update

An organizing committee stemming from efforts to study marine sanctuary status for the San Luis Obispo County Coast has been created, the first formal step toward possible expansion of the Monterey Bay Marine Sanctuary to include the county’s coastal waters. However, the Sierra Club was not represented among the 13 persons proposed for what was named the Marine Interests Group Working Committee at a closed meeting on Jan. 30 at the Morro Bay Public Library. Four representatives of elected officials also were proposed as ex-officio members.

Duke Energy, the controversial power company that is seeking to build a new Morro Bay Power Plant, was included among the 13 proposed members, although it had not been widely known that Duke was among the 166 nominations to the group. A report on the closed meeting from a facilitator hired to coordinate the Working Committee’s activities said that it will consider adding more members. The Santa Lucia Chapter had nominated two of its members.

The name, Marine Interests Group (MIG), was suggested by Supervisor Shirley Bianchi, who said it is meant to show “there’s no predetermined agenda here” and the committee’s purpose is “broader than only the potential sanctuary issue,” the report said. Robin Robinson, representing the World Wildlife Fund, which has agreed to provide some funding for MIG activities, hired the facilitator, Don Maruska, a Los Osos resident. She suggested the first committee members, who were reviewed by the committee, her report said.

The committee adopted a statement of purpose, which said the MIG seeks to:

1. Promote understanding of the marine resources off the coast of San Luis Obispo County and the needs and interests of the stakeholders involved with their use and enjoyment.
2. Openly examine potential ways to sustain and enhance the resources.
3. Recommend desirable courses of action (or no action) as appropriate to support the resources and their sustainable use.

Proposed committee members include Bill Yates, mayor, City of Morro Bay; Carolyn Moffatt, commissioner, Port San Luis Harbor; Dean Wendt, professor of Marine Biology, Cal Poly; Hugh Thomas, commercial fishing (Port San Luis); Joy Fitzhugh, County Farm Bureau; Marla Morrissey, conservation, Morro Estuary Greenbelt Alliance; Matt Fleming, chair, Surfrider Foundation; Mike Multari, director, Morro Bay National Estuary Program; Pat Mullen, Duke Energy; Emily Marshall Heatherington, executive director, Environmental Center of San Luis Obispo County; Patricia Wilmore, legislative affairs, San Luis Obispo Chamber of Commerce; Ron Massengil, Cambria, member, Sanctuary Advisory Council; Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary, and Bianchi, second district Supervisor.

Proposed ex-officio members are Greg Haas, representing Rep. Lois Capps; Richard Maciel, Bianchi; Sandy Agalos, Assemblymember Abel Maldonado, and Vicki Janssen, Supervisor Katcho Achadjian.

The MIG grew out of requests for nominations to a stakeholders committee by an ad hoc citizens group last November, which came about after the Monterey Bay sanctuary Advisory Council voted to give priority status to consideration of expansion of that sanctuary to cover the San Luis Obispo County coast.

Conservation Committee Report

by Pete Wagner, Chair, Conservation Committee

Remember caulerpa taxifolia, the kudzu of the coast? (For readers unfamiliar with southern ways, kudzu was imported as a fast growing ground cover to stabilize erosion along banks and to feed grazing cattle. Unfortunately cattle don’t like it, but it does like the same conditions in which it was introduced.)

Caulerpa was imported from Europe for ornamental use in aquaria. It escaped and has proliferated along the southern California coast, where it overwhelms indigenous aquatic plant life and, once established, is extremely difficult to eradicate.

In 2001, the Sierra Club supported Assembly Bill 1324, banning its use, which became law. However, a Regional Water Quality Control Board staff member recently informed me that, through ignorance, it is still being dumped into sewer and drainage systems where it can work its way into coastal waters. Further, it is moving north. Legislation (AB 120) has been introduced this year to fund a million-dollar eradication program in the Agua Hedionda Lagoon at Carlsbad where the infestation is severe. The Club intends to support this and whatever other eradication actions that will help keep this devastating species from invading our coastline.

In connection with the Duke and Diablo projects we are keeping track of the electricity supply and demand picture. The California Energy Commission recently issued new five-year projections. For normal August temperatures, the month of highest demand, they predict operating reserves ranging from 16% this year to 8.8% in 2008, which are considered adequate to prevent shortages. Even under unusually hot weather conditions there will be reserve capacity between 3% and 9% in those years. The calculations assume the addition of new power plants that are only 75% or more likely to come on line, and conservation at a very modest one-third of the 2001 level.

These figures show a much more optimistic supply/demand picture than has been previously predicted and tend to reduce the urgency for new facilities like the Duke expansion of the Morro Bay power plant. Conservation is an enormous part of the balance. In 2001 conservation lowered demand by about 4,000 megawatts (MW), more than 7% of the state’s capacity of roughly 55,000 MW and the equivalent of two Diablo or four Morro Bay plants!

The more energy we save through conservation, the fewer power plants with their environmental impacts that need to be built.
time to voice support because of the legal attacks on the Commission and the debate in the California Legislature over ways to modify terms of Commissioners to blunt those assaults from development interests.

County residents have established a proud tradition of turning out in large numbers for the few Commission meetings that have been held here, each time sending a clear and convincing message that Central Coast communities are united in their support of coastal preservation. “More than 1,000 county residents heeded the call to help save our coast in January, 1998, and attended Commission hearings to help stop the Hearst Corporation’s plans for massive development of the Ranch, including wholesale transformation of San Simeon Point from its natural state,” Collins said.

“Then we showed them again in February, 2001, when more than 500 citizens attended the Commission’s hearings on a periodic review of the Local Coastal Plan as part of the Club’s Great Coastal Places Campaign.”

Another review is on the Commission’s agenda and all the critical issues, such as Hearst Ranch, are once again up for grabs. “We need you in the meeting room, waving signs and at the microphone once more to show that our determination to save our coast is unyielding,” she said.

A key part of this meeting is designed for the Commissioners to hear comments from citizens about how the county Board of Supervisors has been implementing the Local Coastal Plan, and for Commission staff to share the preliminary results of their periodic review of the Plan. “This review has far reaching implications for the future of the San Luis Obispo County coast and the Hearst Ranch because it involves the most basic plan that will guide development for many years to come,” Collins explained.

A major part of the periodic review will deal with the Commission’s 165 “Final Recommendations for Corrective Action” on the Local Coastal Plan, which first were submitted to the County as a preliminary report in February, 2001; resubmitted as a supplemental report in July, 2001, and adopted by unanimous vote of the Commission during its meeting in August, 2001. Adoption of the 165 recommendations was designed to bring San Luis Obispo County’s Plan into compliance with the Coastal Act. The County has agreed to 33 of the 165 recommendations but in general their value is questionable because, among other things, the county has chosen vague wording for those 33 recommendations.

“The real story here is that our Local Coastal Plan does not comply with the Coastal Act, and that results in destruction of our coast. It also imposes a hardship on innocent citizens trying to comply with the county’s regulations, only to have their projects denied by the Coastal Commission because they don’t comply with the Coastal Act,” Collins explained. “As a result, the county leads property owners wanting to build their retirement homes down a primrose path by approving projects under a Plan that is out-of-date and out of compliance.”

Collins said if the county would adopt and implement the 165 recommendations unanimously adopted by the Commission, “our coast would have a greater level of protection, and people who want to build on their property would get the clear and correct information from the county Planning Department, not a false ‘green light’ only to find their plans denied by the Commission.” She noted that the Commission has provided funds to the county to implement the recommendations, but the county is not doing it. Instead, it has scheduled only 33 of the 165 recommendations for discussion at public hearings before the Commission’s meeting here in March, and those 33 are the only ones the county ostensibly supports. The rest of the 165 include the recommendations to rezone the Hearst Ranch back to agriculture, which are in dispute.

As the most informed people—from former Commission Chair Sara Wan to Commission Executive Director Peter Douglas to Sierra Club Coastal Program Director Mark Massara—there have been repeated, the turnout of people and their comments are what carry the force that plays a crucial role in deciding how the Commission votes on key matters, she pointed out. “I urge you to attend the hearing to implore the Coastal Commission to stop development from destroying the Coast from Oceano to the Hearst Ranch,” Collins said.

To stay abreast of any late changes in times or dates of the Periodic Review and Oceano Dunes on the Commission’s agenda, members should check the Commission web site (http://www.ceres.ca.gov/coastalcommission/index.html), the Santa Lucia Chapter site (http://santalucia.sieraclub.org/index/index.html) or the media.

Support Protection of Oceano Dunes
by Terrell Collins, Chapter Chair

The next Coastal Commission hearing to renew the permit will be allowed continued use of the Oceano Dunes State Vehicular Recreation Area (ODSRA) to be held on Friday, March 7, at the Embassy Suites Hotel in San Luis Obispo, and your attendance is urgently needed to show support for endangered species protection and condemn State Parks’ mismanagement of attendance is urgently needed to show the full extent of your legal authority under the Coastal Act and exercise your full authority—the NRC. In other words, no one is intervening in the bankruptcy court to prevent a terrorist attack and its potential consequences at the plant.

In the spring or early summer, the Conservation Committee will analyze the applicant’s findings and issue a recommendation for action by the Chapter Executive Committee. Our concern is that the so-called management plan does not prevent a terrorist attack at the plant and its potential consequences at the plant.

The third issue is the future of the Diablo Canyon Independent Safety Committee (DCISC). This committee provides an important input into the safety issue. In preparing your comments, you may refer to the Executive Committee’s recommendations that are posted on the Chapter web site at http://santalucia.sierrclub.org/index/index.html.

Diablo Canyon Update
by Pete Wagner, Chair, Conservation Committee

Several important issues concerning operations at Diablo Canyon Plant are approaching a critical stage. First, the Mothers for Peace, the Santa Lucia Mothers, and the Santa Lucia Environmental Action Coalition, in conjunction with the Regional Water Quality Control Board, have recommended a dry cooling system for the plant. However, PG&E is proposing to abolish it as part of the moratorium agreement as it is never used for the safety of the plant. This proposal has been accepted by the NRC as it is never used for public liaison and education on all environmental and public safety issues related to power generation at Diablo. Even if that doesn’t happen, the committee must at least be allowed to continue its present form since it is the only existing mechanism for third-party public participation in federal decisions. Together with the Mothers, the Chapter is intervening in the bankruptcy court to separate the DCISC question completely from PG&E’s financial and legal problems, which should be the only subject of the bankruptcy court’s decision. Indeed, the burden of funding the DCISC is transferred to the taxpayers, the revenues and expenses at Diablo, and the mother committees to purchase power plants to allow them to use and discharge ocean or fresh water for cooling. As one requirement, PG&E must agree to a funding agreement covering compensation for the environmental impact of the cooling water discharge. The agreement could not be reviewed by the Chapter in time for this issue of the San Luis Obispo. However, it was expected to mirror the draft released two years ago, which will presumably provide funds for the beach and land for the damage to marine life caused by the heated water discharge. This proposal most likely take action on the proposed agreement sometime this spring or early summer. The Conservation Committee will analyze the applicant’s findings and issue a recommendation for action by the Chapter Executive Committee. Our concern is that the so-called management plan does not prevent a terrorist attack at the plant and its potential consequences at the plant.

. . . is a way to protect the environment as well as yourself. If you do not have a will, the state decides how your property and other affairs are handled. Decisions made now can later provide financial security for family, friends, and the Sierra Club. You may even direct your bequest to a specific Club program or your home Chapter.
