Echoes from the Chair  By Jim S. Fleming

Hello, my fellow Sierra enthusiasts! I hope that all of you are safe and well during these difficult times. Thanksgiving is in two days’ time from now, and as I think about the mountains, I give thanks for them and all of the incredible opportunities that they provide me. So much of my life is enriched by the Sierra, the people that I climb with, and the members of the SPS! While we may not be able to go to wild places in large groups or schedule outings just yet, we can think about what we can do to preserve and protect them, as well as other areas of the Earth that we explore. That is, after all, what the Sierra Club is all about—to preserve, protect, and explore this wonderful planet. Once this pandemic is over and we can resume our normal activities, we can look back at the accomplishments and be proud of our efforts. We can all enjoy the gladness the mountains give us. I look forward to that time, when I can see y’all in person again, and share the greatness with you. Happy Climbing!

Climbed the Vagmarken List?

The SPS would like to recognize its members who have climbed the one hundred peaks on the Vagmarken Club Sierra Crest List, those members to be listed on the web site and in the emblem archives. For the list and its history, see https://www.sierraclub.org/angeles/sierra-peaks/vagmarken-list. Apply to Kathy Rich, member of the Emblem Committee, with your list and climb dates (or at least the peak you finished the list on and approximate date) at kathynarich@gmail.com.

Welcome New Members!

Chuck Schillings

Chuck is a California native who attributes his love of the great outdoors to his family’s annual Yosemite Valley camping trip when he was a child. He spent the summer after graduating high school backpacking through Alaska with a $5 canvas army surplus backpack and a “tent” fashioned from Visqueen plastic. Since then, both he and his equipment have become a little more sophisticated as he completed the JMT and climbed Shasta, Rainier, Kilimanjaro, Matterhorn, and multiple Sierra peaks over the years.

Chandra Campbell

Chandra is originally a Texas flatlander who saw her first mountains as a young child, the Colorado Rockies, from the windshield of her parents’ car on cross-country vacations. She climbed her first peak, a day hike of Mt. Whitney, within a year of transplanting to California in the early 1990s. Her other Sierra peaks include Olancha, Langley, Matterhorn Peak, Half Dome, and Cloud’s Rest. Internationally, she has hiked the Inca Trail and summited Kilimanjaro. Her favorite short backpacking trip is the Rae Lakes Loop.

Chuck and Chandra are particularly interested in climbing the SPS Emblem Peaks and California 14ers. They are both honored and excited about becoming part of the SPS community and look forward to meeting everyone and joining the outings.

When All Is Said and Done

By Corrine Livingston

Well, maybe it’s not all said and done, at least for climbing in the Sierra. I remember finishing the SPS List for the first time in 2010 on Starr King and being giddy (but sad at the same time) for completing the sometimes-grueling list and ever the big commitment. I didn’t plan on doing it again. But pretty quickly I realized that I couldn’t give up the grandeur of the Sierra or the exhilaration of climbing those gorgeous peaks. And I already had a few seconds from going with people who needed them for the first time. The other thing I couldn’t imagine was that I may not frequently see my climbing friends, such as Daryn Dodge, Kathy Rich, John Cheslick, Keith Christensen, Paul Garry, Lisa Barboza to name a few and Shane Smith, whom we sadly lost this year.
Yes, 2020 was a pretty horrific year. It didn’t come without its ups and downs along the way. Nothing as significant as for those who were sick or who lost their livelihoods or even their lives or those of their loved ones. Positively, the year did lead to more people hiking to enjoy the freedom of the hills versus staying home with the continual lock downs.

I had eight peaks to climb this year to finish, several grudge peaks including Mt. Perkins and Pt. Powell. Thankfully Keith needed Perkins, and we had a nice early June climb of it. A very good thing about climbing the list twice is that one does meet up with new climbing friends such as Bill Carpenter, who snow climbed Mt. Dade with me this year. Then Sandra Hao came back from New York and climbed Silver Peak with us over the July 4th weekend—fun! Phil Bates was also another new climbing partner on my second time around and expertly led Paul Garry and me up Mt. Gardiner this year and also Keith and me up Mt. Starr King. We met Signe Swenson up around Lake South America and climbed Jordan with her. Luckily, Bob Pickering led a group of us up Thunder this August—there was a lot more exposure on this peak than I remember. The other special thing about climbing the list twice is that one gets to do new routes on many of the peaks, almost like climbing them for the first time. Plus, I didn’t remember the routes or even some of the peaks from before, so there were actually lots of “first times” the second time. Good thing other folks know the routes—thank you!

My official Sierra Club list finish was to be on Cloudripper led by Tina on September 26. In late August, the Sierra Club cancelled this trip due to COVID. A small group of us had already scheduled to climb Pt. Powell and had permits for Labor Day weekend (wasn’t the permit system a nightmare this year?). Given all that had transpired in 2020, my husband Bill, along with our ever-so-friendly dogs Ranchienne and Granite Chief, climbed Cloudripper on August 31, just in case something else happened. And happened it did! Pt. Powell (my biggest grudge peak) was to become my new list finish peak with just a few, but important climbing partners. The four of us—Paul, Kathy, Keith, and I—had a summit party with chocolate chip cookies. Kathy, Keith, and I also celebrated over dinner (with masks no less) in Bishop. Then all heck broke loose with the Creek fire, and the climbing season in the Sierra was essentially over due to smoke and forest closures. Pt. Powell was my last (unintended) peak thanks to the trials of 2020.

I have many more stories to tell for this second time around, but I will cut it somewhat short as I’m sure all of you have had similar experiences—long backpacks, amazing scenery, crummy food, weather, laughter abounding, route finding, some disappointments, epic memories. Fortunately, there are other lists, maybe not as endearing, to climb in the Sierra. While I wasn’t interested in the Vagmarken, Tahoe Ogle, or 13500 lists on Peakbagger (and passed up some peaks on those lists—darn) before, those are my new focus as there can be no life without climbing in the Sierra. I am grateful to live close to the Sierra, and we all must protect this beautiful place forever more. I hope to see you all in the Sierra and maybe in the California desert too where the Sierra can be seen from afar.

After all, it isn’t all said and done—yet.
Most of you will be familiar with Point Powell, usually climbed along with Mount Thompson, since they are on the SPS list, but may not be aware that there is a Mount Powell nearby as well. At 13,364′, Mount Powell is higher than Point Powell (13,360+) but is not as prominent. I was interested in climbing this peak because it is on the Vagmarken Sierra Crest List and is also an Emblem Peak on the Western States Climbers List.

Mount Powell sits on the Sierra Crest between Echo Col and Mount Thompson. There has been much confusion over the years because, depending on what map or guidebook you are looking at, the name Mount Powell can refer to any one of the three summits on this section of the crest. The western-most of the three summits is labeled "Mount Powell" on the most recent Mt. Darwin 7.5′ topo map. The middle and lowest summit is the 13,356′ peak that has no name on the most recent map but was incorrectly labeled "Mount Powell" on the 1983 Mt. Darwin quad (this version is on CalTopo even today). The third, easternmost summit is the SPS peak Point Powell (also unnamed on the map), just west of the Thompson-Powell Col. Over the years, these three summits have come to be referred to as Point John, Point Wesley, and Point Powell (from west to east). Mt. Powell was originally named by the USGS in 1911 in honor of John Wesley Powell, the noted western explorer and former director of the USGS.

While the approach to Pt. Powell is from Sunset Lake, Mount Powell is climbed from Echo Lake since it’s next to Mt. Wallace. Lisa Barboza and I had hiked into Echo Lake in hopes of climbing Mt Powell in June 2019, but once we saw the steep snow on the approach, we decided not to attempt it (I climbed Mt Haeckel instead). I had been in contact earlier in the year with Teresa Gergen (from Lakewood, Colorado) since we had discussed potentially trying it together. She shared with me her proposed route up the north-northwest face, which is the usual route. I learned that she ended up using snow pickets on her climb in July 2019 with Ally and John Kirk, so I was glad we didn’t attempt it last year!

This being a low snow year, I figured my chances were much better. I managed to secure a walk-in permit for the Sabrina Lake trailhead for July 21. Fortunately, Daryn Dodge suggested I check the weekly satellite images (a new feature now available on the Peakbagger app) to assess the snow levels on the route I would take. These weekly satellite images allow much higher resolution than the daily satellite ones, as one can zoom in for much detail. To my surprise, considerable snow was still on the north-facing slopes below Mt. Powell, so taking an ice axe with me was clearly necessary. Ting Chin, who’d mentioned that she’d like to climb Mt. Haeckel when we met a couple of months earlier on a climb of Birch Mountain, had agreed to hike in together to Moonlight Lake and then climb our respective peaks from there. Next morning, I set off for Echo Lake and followed Teresa Gergen’s track around the east side of the lake and into the bowl beneath Mt. Powell, which still had considerable snow as expected. At first it was easy to kick steps in the snow, but it then became a little icier, and I regretted not carrying my crampons as well. I managed to cut steps with my ice axe, however, making my way up to the exposed rock bands which formed part of the north ridge.

The normal route on Mt. Powell is to climb the prominent snow face up to the small col just to the west of the peak. From the ridge it is an easy 3rd class scramble to the summit. However, at 35-to-45 degrees, the snow face is rather steep, and I didn’t have crampons with me. I was hoping that I might be able to hug the rocks on the left side of the snowfield but even from a distance it looked pretty icy, so I decided to continue up the rocks to a chute just east of the summit. At the base of the chute a bright red object caught my eye—it was an old rusty tobacco can. Although I didn’t examine it very closely as I was keen to reach the summit, it didn’t appear to have anything inside, so I put it in my pack, then continued on up. Climbing the chute involved some class 3, but it was only about fifteen feet and fairly straightforward. I was feeling quite pleased at my rock scrambling route and being able to avoid the steep snow on the north-northwest face. On the summit I was disappointed at first not to find any sign of a register. After poking around, I finally found a few scraps of paper tucked into a torn plastic bag; the last sign in being Teresa Gergen’s in 2019. There was no sign of the Eckert register from 2000 that Bob Burd’s group found on their Pt. Powell to Mt. Powell traverse in 2006. After taking a few photos and noting that Mt. Haeckel looked pretty snow-free, I headed back to where I had ascended on the east ridge. Instead of down climbing the chute, I decided to go a little farther to the low point on the ridge. As Bob Burd noted, the climbing along this section of the ridge was solid granite and quite enjoyable. My descent back down to the rock band went quickly and was definitely easier than the chute I had come up.

Back at camp at around 2 pm (approximately seven hours roundtrip for the climb), I found Ting waiting for me after her successful climb of Mt. Haeckel. I pulled out the old tobacco can I had found in the chute below Mt Powell to show her. On the outside was written "Sir Walter Raleigh Smoking Tobacco" and "Brown and Williams Tobacco Corp, Ky." Turning it over, we realized that there was a small spiral notebook inside. Most of the notebook was damp but the first few pages were dry. It was labeled "Stuart Hall Pocket Note Book, 10c". The first entries (noted as added on August 1, 1950) were “24 June, 1937: Mt Hood climbers—H North, Bill Blanchard, Gary Leech.” On page 2 someone had written “#2: Norman Clyde, Ben M, Endicott Hanson, Maxine Steinke, Alice Ann Dayton, Marion Steinke, and Tim Krantz [with a note that Norman Clyde’s group had considered the peak to be Mt Lee, not Mt Powell].” Below this entry were other names, including that of Carl Heller. After letting the notebook dry a little in the sun, we carefully turned a few more pages. On page 6, dated August 26, 1967, were many signatures, including those of Andy Smatko and Barbara Lilley. The last entry in the book, dated August 14, 1985, was by Mark Nadell, who wrote "beautiful ridge top traverse from Echo Col".

It would thus appear that this register book may have been sitting at the base of the chute below Mt. Powell for up to thirty-five years—perhaps having been blown off the summit sometime after the last sign-in in August 1985. Interestingly, Secor states in his book The High Sierra: Peaks, Passes, Trails that the first ascent via the north-northwest face was on August 27, 1967, by Andy Smatko and seventeen others. Although the date is off by one day, this corresponds to the sign-in on page 6 of the notebook I found. Without additional research, it is not known whether this was in fact the first ascent by this route or whether earlier climbers dating back to 1937 had used the north-northwest face or some other route such as the north ridge. In any event, the register books on Mt. Powell haven’t been very lucky over the years—Steve Eckert commented that their group left a register in nesting tin cans after finding an old Band-Aid can with nothing inside on their ascent in 2000. It would appear that this register subsequently went missing as well. This peak deserves a decent register, so the next group of climbers should take one up there!

Note: the little spiral notebook and the Walter Raleigh Smoking Tobacco can have been sent to Dan Richter, SPS Archivist, for safe keeping.

We pestered founding member Barbara Lilley for photos from early SPS climbs featuring other members. Though she says that most of her photos are of scenery, she sent us these slides, some predating the formation of the SPS. Enjoy! And thank you, Barbara!

I was young. And foolish. What more can I say?

Jim and I were freshmen at Oregon State University. It was late October, but the snows hadn’t hit yet in the Cascades. And Middle Sister was an “easy” peak, well within our abilities.

We drove to the trailhead and set out with our backpacks on Saturday. The weather forecast suggested that a storm could come in Sunday, but we were confident we’d beat it out. It was a beautiful afternoon in fall, and we found a spot with a good water source to set up camp. It was a bit off the trail. (This was before the GPS system.)

In the morning we set off for the peak. Route finding was not challenging in the clear weather, and the going was good. About halfway up, we looked behind us and saw clouds rising from the Willamette Valley. We watched them for a while and concluded that we’d get to the top before they caught us. And we did.

Our miscalculation was for the return. On the way down we were soon in near whiteout conditions—remember, no GPS. We had difficulty navigating but eventually found our way back down to the trail. We could not find our camp. After looking for it for about half an hour with the snow still falling, we decided to head for the car, abandoning our overnight gear. After all, if we waited too long the car might get snowed in for the winter. And the snow was getting deeper, obscuring the trail.

Anticlimactically, about ten minutes after this decision, I thought I recognized the area where we had left the trail. Sure enough, the camp was a few minutes into the woods. We packed up and hiked out. By the time we’d reached the car, we were in the rain, below the snow line. No harm done.

But we did learn to set up camps where we could more easily find them upon our return. And to pay more attention to what the vicinity of camp would look like when coming back.

I’m still bagging peaks forty-five years later. But I wasn’t sure, as we came down in that storm, whether I’d make it back alive. I don’t race storms to the top any more—it’s more important to get out than up.
Don’t know if it was a surge of pride or a surge of fear that I felt coursing through my body as I watched my fifteen-year-old son, Donovan, casually stroll across the airy traverse below the Dragon Peak summit. Either way, it was over in a matter of seconds, and there we stood together atop this wonderful peak. But our day was only half done as we were bent on making the traverse to Mt. Gould and then complete a loop that would take us from Onion Valley trailhead, up Dragon Peak and Mt. Gould, and back to the trailhead via Kearsarge Pass.

It was just a few years ago that I introduced my son to the High Sierra peaks (he cannot recall a backpack trip in Mineral King at the age of five, when we aborted after he spent the first night throwing up from altitude sickness). In those few years we have done twenty SPS peaks together; and we have been trying to push ourselves to link multiple peaks on each excursion for the adventure (and efficiency!). This loop appealed to us after having gazed at both peaks from atop Peak 3817 (just north of Lilley Pass) the month before. We decided to do the loop counter-clockwise to avoid the sand slog up to Mt. Gould from Kearsarge Pass.

We departed from the trailhead at 6:00 am. The majority of the trail up Golden Trout Lake Trail is easy to follow, and where it is obscured, the route is fairly obvious. Once we reached the wet meadow the “trail” forked—we headed to the north side of the meadow, skirted around it, and headed up east toward Lilley Pass. We stopped for breakfast at Lake 3417. At this point I would be chasing my son the rest of the hike as he charged ahead, passing on the east side of Lake 3460 toward the broad talus gully heading northwest. It’s certainly humbling to have your own son so quickly outpace you in the mountains.

Once at the top of the gully, we found an obvious, short, narrow talus chute heading northeast. There is a chockstone that needs to be negotiated before reaching the south ridge of Dragon Peak. The class 2 ridge was enjoyable with views into the Rae Lakes drainage. On the way to the summit gendarme, you can keep it class 2 or spice it up with some fun class 3-4 climbing if you keep closer to the ridge proper. Secor describes the traverse on the summit gendarme as an “exposed class 3 ledge that lacks handholds.” We found plenty of handholds, and ultimately it was not as intimidating as advertised. We enjoyed the extensive views from the summit, including looking back at our perch from the month before on Peak 3817.
After dropping back down the ridge to the low point, there were only a few class 2-3 moves to negotiate on the north side of the ridge before the going got easy. It wasn’t long before we found ourselves approaching the summit blocks of Mt. Gould. This peak wouldn’t be a challenge if not for the last three or four moves to get to the summit. That said, the views were rewarding and worth a nice resting perch to gaze deeper into the Sierra.

For the most part we chose to “boot ski” down Gould, joining the Kearsarge Pass trail just a few minutes north of the pass. After enjoying lunch at the busy pass (with all the parties socially distanced) we trucked down the Kearsarge Pass trail to the car. All told, the adventure was about ten miles in ten hours, including all the leisurely summit time.

You’ll probably remember Donovan as the cover boy three years ago in the January-March 2018 issue of the Echo (volume 62.1). That issue appears framed on the wall at right, where you can see Donovan on the summit of Smith Mountain, his first SPS peak, on September 23, 2017, aged 12. As you can see from the photo mounted above, he had a very early start climbing! (Photo by Jason Pair).

From the Outings Chair

By Phil Bates

Hello SPSers!

Well, as I write, we’re quickly coming up on the close of another year, a year that probably is unlike any we have ever experienced in our lives thus far. Regardless of the level of natural and manmade disasters we’ve experienced thus far in 2020, there is one constant that I can point to. This singular truth is that the mountains, high or low, far and wide, continue to provide a source of mental and physical rejuvenation for countless people. It is this magic quality of the mountains that we lovers of the Sierra Nevada seek to protect and to promote. As we know, the Sierra continues to be under many stresses, some of which we may not yet fully comprehend. Given what we know and see at this time, I believe we can all give her a helping hand when we’re enjoying the Sierra, which might be as simple as not stepping on that wildflower leaning into the trail!

I hope that the club will be able to sponsor outings by next spring or summer, so I ask you all to start thinking about spring and early summer climbs you may want to have supported. Last, it would be great if many of you can post your experiences to our SPS Facebook page (https://www.facebook.com/groups/366711653441263/) so we can be more informed and enjoy your adventures.

SPS Management Committee Meeting Minutes
Monday, October 12, 2020
7:00 pm via Zoom

1. Call to order at 7:15. Present were Jim Fleming, chair; Paul Garry, vice-chair/banquet; Alexander Smirnoff, treasurer; Jason Seieroe, outreach; Tina Bowman, secretary.

2. Standard business and reports.
   a. Approval of minutes (August 2020). Done via email.
   b. Chair—no report.
   c. Vice Chair/Banquet—Paul has the contract but needs to sign and return it. He’ll call Almansor about whether the deposit ($750, not yet paid) can be returned if we need to postpone or cancel because of the pandemic. One idea is that if we hold it we could use Zoom for people not attending in person to participate in some way. Tina will contact Mel MacInnes at National to see whether she has a sense when we can have in-person events again. We also discussed using PayPal for those not wishing to pay by check since Brownpapertickets still has not sent us the $1000 they owe us.
   d. Outings—cancelled through February 2021.
   e. Treasurer’s report—$9,774.43 current balance. Alexander will try emailing Brownpapertickets again (they have no phone number and emails in the past have been answered by a form email).
   f. Emblem Committee Report—Corrine Livingston finished the list for the second time on September 5th on Pt Powell but (Continued on page 21)

SPS Management Committee Meeting Minutes
Monday, December 7, 2020
7:00 pm via Google Meet

1. Call to order at 7:17. Present were Jim Fleming, chair; Alexander Smirnoff, treasurer; Jason Seireroe, fifth officer/outreach; Tina Bowman, secretary.
2. Standard business and reports.
   a. Approval of minutes (October 2020)—approved.
   b. Chair—no report.
   c. Vice Chair—banquet. See below under old business.
   d. Outings—no report.
   e. Treasurer’s report—Current bank balance is $9858.13. Alexander needs to pay Michael Chamoun his banquet honorarium and reimburse Tina for Echo expenses. He will also request a check for $200 as a donation to the Angeles Chapter.
   f. Emblem Committee Report—no new emblem holders. Kathy Rich suggested that we maintain a list on the web site and in the archives of the SPS members who have completed the Vagmarken list of one hundred peaks along the Sierra Crest. We agreed to do this and will announce it in the Echo and on the web site.
   g. Outreach—Jason has arranged for Garret McLean to give a Zoom or Google Meet talk on January 13th about a climb he did and has another person willing to speak at the next virtual event (not the banquet).
   h. Archives—The Tom Ross photographic collection has been donated to the Eastern California Museum in Independence. They are hoping to have an exhibit of the photos in 2021 and have begun digitizing the collection.
   i. Echo
      i. Deadline for next issue?—February 22nd
      ii. Hand over more issues to be scanned and uploaded to the website?—no report.
      iii. Move to HTML version (update)?—no report.
   j. Mountain Records—no report.
   k. IT—no report.
   l. Website—no report.
   m. Conservation—no report.
   n. Safety Chair—no report.

3. Old business
   a. Election—Laura Newman is willing to run, as well as Alexander, Jason, Jim, Paul, and Tina. Mary McMannes and Don Sparks are serving on the nominating and election committees. Tina will prepare the Survey Monkey and paper ballots with a deadline of January 15th for voting.
   b. Lifetime membership or donor levels (as HPS has and DPS is considering)?—not at this time.
   c. Banquet—We decided that it will be best to hold the banquet virtually this year on the date already announced, March 21, 2021, with Paul Garry speaking on his climb of Vincent Massif in Antarctica. We will revise the banquet flyer to announce this and make it clear that Zoom or Google Meet is very easy to use.

4. New business
   a. Next meeting date—Monday, February 15th, 2021, 7:00 p.m., via Google Meet, which Jason will set up.

Meeting adjourned at 7:46.

Respectfully submitted,
Tina Bowman, Secretary
Though this image is familiar to many of our members, either because of hiking from here and/or from owning a Mac with this Mac OSX High Sierra default desktop image, we received no answers to our question of “Where is this view?” The answer is looking east from the south shore of North Lake into the North Fork of the Bishop Creek Drainage.
This occasional just-for-fun puzzle is for you to figure out which Sierra peak or peaks are featured in the image. If you have a fine mystery peak puzzle to challenge Echo readers, please send it to tina@bowmanchange.com. We welcome any mountain images, including those from popular culture—imagery used and abused in film and print!

Can you name this popular Emblem peak? Where was the photo taken?

Send your answer to Tina Bowman at tina@bowmanchange.com.
